OPPOSITION DEVELOPES TO PLANS FOR CARNIVAL

Manufacturers Business Men and Church People Appear Before Council to Protest Against Affair

CLAIMED TO BE DETRIMENT TO TOWN

A formidable wall of opposition to the proposal of Charleroi Lodge, No. 133, Loyal Order of Moose to hold a carnival in Charleroi the week of July 4 was shown at an adjourned meeting of council Tuesday night. Industrial concerns, a number of professional and business men and church men constituted the opposition. Council decided to defer action, either sanctioning the carnival or opposing it until Friday night, when the matter will again be taken up. With their authority as the individual verbal sanction of some members of council, the Moose order had already signed a contract with the Empire Carnival company. This contract which it was stated was different from the contracts of most carnivals was presented by a comittee from the Moose order, and was read.

Petitions were presented in opposition to the carnival scheme and several citizens and factory heads spoke in opposition. The chief speaker for the opposition was H. J. Booth superintendent of the Imperial Bottle factory. Mr. Booth said that with the manufacturing concerns it was a matter of dollars and cents. He sa d that they didn't oppose the carnival because it was a Moose carnival, but because it was a carnival. Mr Booth stated that such would mean a heavy loss for the factories. He said that past experience had showed that production was curtailed about 30 per cent, or if factories were operating to their fullest capacity from 100 per cent to 60 per cent. This he said was due to employes absenting themselves from work. The factory, a permanent institution, it was stated, would not only be a loser through a weekly visitation of a company which would put practically no money into the town, but the town would be a loser because the wage per employe during the week would be cut in the same proportion that industrial operation was curtailed.

GIVE REASONS FOR THEIR OPPOSITION

Number of Business Men Protest Against Carnival and Tell Why-- Characterize it is a "Nuisance"

"Nuisance," "a demoralizing agent," "something that will not do the town a particle of good," "rottenest thing that ever happened," and other like phrases were used by business men this morning in characterizing carnivals,thelike of which Charleroi Lodge No. 133 Loyal Order of Moose wants to hold in Charleroi the week of July 4. That there is overwhelming sentiment against the proposed carnival was a fact evidenced by a quiet visit among most of the business men. Out of the number visited but two really spoke in favor of it. One of these somewhat facetiously observed that a carnival tended to relieve the monotony and gave a fellow a feeling as though he had had a vacation. He said that as a business proposition,carnivals usually had been a good thing for him. The other man of the two speaking in favor of the carnival said that while he did not figure it would be a good business proposition the week it was held, he was convinced it would be the means of bringing strangers here,who would come back.

The first business man asked as to his opinion of the carnival said: "It's the rottenest that ever happened. It would be a decided detriment to have a carnival come here. I'm one of the opposition."

Another man said: "If they mean to hold this carnival on lots bordering on the streets, then I am opposed. But I cannot see that there would be much objection to holding the carnival somewhere where it would not be so noticeable."

"Carnivals are demoralizing agents," said one. "They demoralize our factories, dirty our streets, bring no money into town and take money out. They are an absolute detriment to business. I have had exeprience with them, and know what I am talking about."

A groceryman said he was opposed to carnivals because they generally were no good, and because they damaged trade besides tending to demoralize the community. "A carnival is a nuisance," he emphatically declared.

Furniture men, dry goods men and all classes of dealers were approached with the usual result, chiefly that they found carnivals a detriment to business conditions and to the town generally. The general conclusion naturally follows that if a carnival company does come here for exhibition purposes in July, it will exhibit under difficulties. The trend of sentiment is against carnivals, but not against the Moose order, a fact prominently mentioned by several of those interviewed.

TO INSTITUTE CURB MARKET THIS MONTH

First Produce Will Probably be Sold May 25-- Later Date to de Selected for the Formal Opening

PRODUCERS ARE GREATLY INTERESTED

That within two weeks Charleroi will virtually have a curb market in operation was decided at a meeting Tuesday night of members of the Charleroi Business Men's Association with farmers and gardeners at the Busness Men's Association rooms. On Saturday May 25, another meeting will be held that will be a sort of "open house" affair, between the farmers and local pueople. On that date also there will be some garden stuff and farm products sold from the curb along Sixth street below Washington. However there will be no formal opening until a later date to be arranged at the "open house" meeting.

Farmers and producers generally are interested in the curb market scheme. Through their talk with the farmers and gardeners present at the meeting Tuesday night locally interested persons were much encouraged and have strong faith that the movement will be a success.

One man present at the meeting said that he was so strongly of the belief that the curb market would be a good thing, that if necessary would purchase a stall along Six street from which he might dispo of produce. He was informed that tl curb market would be absolutely fre to producers

A question was asked as to whether the curb market would interfere with street peddling of produce. The questioner was informed that the State law gave the right to all producers to sell from their wagons and that they could peddle if they so willed and nobody would have any right or authority to stop them.

Truck farmers and gardeners in the vicinity of Bentleyville back as far as Centerville and through the immediate surrounding country have professed their intention to take advantage of the proposed curb market.

CROSSING PROVIDED

Temporary Bridge Constructed Between Here and Speers

COUNCIL HEARS REPORT

Council had little time left for taking up unfinished borough business Tuesday night after hearing the dispute on the matter of the proposed Moose carnival. Councilman Calvert reported that provisions have been made so people can travel between this borough and Speers. Bridge contractors are now at work on a new bridge over Maple Creek along McKean avenue, which it will take until September to finish. A temporary bridge has been prov ded over a Lincoln avenue route.

A petition was presented asking that council use its influence in having the Pittsburg Railways company make stops with their cars at Fourth street, the same as at Fifth and other streets. The matter was taker under advisement.

President W. R. Gaut was in the chair and councilmen present were: W. H. Calvert, Dr. A. O. Davis, Oscar C. Linn, Frank Riva, and John K. Rickey.

SUPERIOR COURT TO HEAR CASE

Appeal to be Taken to Higher Tribunal by County Poor Directors

Steps were taken Tuesday by the attorneys for the board of Washington county poor directors to appeal to the superior court the case against Controller John H. Moffitt in which a writ of mandamus was sought by the poor directors to compel the controller to honor certain requisitions for funds, the position taken by Controller Moffit being upheld by the Washington county court and the application for the writ being denied.

The case has attracted much attention and the decision of the superior court will be awaited with interest.

SHOWER GIVEN IN HONOR OF BRIDE-TO-BE

At her home on Washington avenue Tuesday evening, a miscellaneous shower was given Miss Linnie Pearl McClure, whose engagement to Carroll E. Cummins has been announced, the wedding to be an event of the near future The affair, which was a surprise, was planned and very successfullly carried out by Misses Bess Stroud, Bertha Oller and Roberta Trew. Only members of the Bachelor Girl's Club to which Miss McClore belongs, and a few of her intimate friends were included in the guest list. Music and conversation were enjoyed, and a dainty lunch was served. Many beautiful gifts were showered upon the bride-to-be.

Miss McClure is a member of one of Charleroi's oldest families. She is popular in the younger social set.

Mr. Chmmins is employed in the First National Bank, coming here from Parkersburg, W. V., about two years ago. He is a graduate of the West Virginia University at Morgantown.

CHARLEROI CASE IS DISPOSED OF

Constable Found Guilty of Assault--His Assistant is Acquitted

With only Judge J. A. McIlvaine on the bench criminal court at Washington has moved rather slowly. However, Judge Porter of Lawrence county was expected to be present to take Judge J. F. Taylor's place on the bench today, after which more speed will be attained. In the case of the commonwealth against David F. Mathers,constable of North Charleroi and his assistant, Charles Chester of Charleroi, Mathers was found guilty of assault and he was fined $15 and costs. Chester was found not guilty, but was assessed the costs. The case was brought by Joseph Erebrich, a fish dealer in Charleroi, against whom Mathers served a levy. Erebrich was also tried for resisting an officer, but was found not guilty. He was also assessed with a portion of the costs.

Andy Powder, a miner living in West Pike Run township in the Daisytown section, entered a plea of guilty to a charge of felonious assault and battery and carrying concealed weapons. He was given an indeterminate sentence in the penitentiary,the maximum being seven years and the minimum the fourth of that amount.

John Showan of Donora charged by Stanilas Lukoski with acrime against morality admitted his guilt. He was fined $10 and costs.

The jury was out in one case and another case was on trial when court adjourned Tuesday evening.

Jury Recommends Playgrounds for Children's Home

INSPECTS INSTITUTIONS

The May term grand jury was discharged Tuesday with the thanks of the court. The jury visited the two homes at Arden and returned to Washington in the afternoon.

In their report to the court the jurymen commended the management of the jail and the county and children's homes. They stated they found things in good sanitary condition and recommended that the woodwork in both the county and children's homes be painted, and that outside fire escapes be provided for the children's home, although the latter has an inside stairway that is regarded as fireproof. They also recommended that the proper authorities provide additional means of enjoyment for the children at the home in the form of outdoor swings, sand-piles and such other appliances at a reasonable cost as are approved in out-door play grounds.

AMATEUR BASEBALL.

With a number of church baseball leagues in this section, Charleroi ought to be able to produce some amateur games this season worth while. In addition to our own league, which in the past has put up some of the best amateur games ever witnessed, and which is in a position to duplicate the record this season, there are church leagues at Monessen and Monongahela, and one has been just organized at Washington. No doubt in the course of a few weeks, after the leagues have developed their best players some interesting games could be arranged between the star clubs of the different leagues. This would add zest to the contests, and bring out the best and most energetic competition among the amateur players.

The church league plan offers the best form of training for baseball that has yet been devised, from the fact that a large number of players in each community have an opportunity to play organized ball according to league rules of the game. At the same time the players are made good physical and moral discipline, which develops in them the best attributes of manhood. Thus far the church baseball league is purely voluntary but it is being recognized that it can operate as a moral force in every community of any considerable size, and giving it the proper support it can become a permanent feature in bringing young men and boys under church influences which they would not get otherwise.

Church league baseball is a social and civic movement and conducted along the right lines it can be made productive of inestimable benefit.

FARMERS GET BUSY.

Arrangements have been completed for conferences to be held at the Capitol at Harrisburg on May 23 and 24 to carry out the plans of the Pennsylvania State Grange for a co-operative association and for the advancement of agricultural education in the schools. The meetings will be for general discussion and representatives of the grange the State and railroads and schools have been invited to attend.

The conference on co-operation will be held in the House caucus room on May 23, at which the plans of the grange for the co-operative buying and selling will be outlined and representatives of the railroads have been invited to attend so that there can be a general expression of opinions on transportation of farm products.

The following day the Grangers will meet with Dr. N. C. Schaffer, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, his staff and prominent educators to discuss "The school code as it affects rural schools especially the teaching of agriculture in public schools."

The farmer, after all, is the chief mover in changing economic conditions. It was the farmers who went into the Populistic movement in the west when things were breaking badly with them, and it is the western states which are the most progressive in their legislation. When the farmers start a movement, something is sure to happen.

PICKED UP IN PASSING

A Chareroi man relates how a friend of his resented the tyrany of a hotel waiter at a prominent Philadelphia hostelry recently. The friend who was a leading Pittsburg business man, has occasion to visit the Quaker City, and put up at the hotel in question. At breakfast next morning not feeling particularly hungry, he ordered a plate of rolls and a cup of coffee. At the conclusion of the repast he placed a dime on the table as a tip for the waiter, who had given him no attention save to bring on the rolls and coffee. Very conspicuously the waiter picked up the dime between his thumb and forefinger, and with many extravagant flourishes and arm extended, carried it across the room and dropped it into a cuspidore.

Instantly the Pittsburger, who was a big and husky man, grabbed the waiter by the back of the neck and dragging him back to the table bumped the flunkey's head good and hard. The head waiter and several others came running up, and asked what the trouble was and what the man wanted.

"I want this fellow to pick that dime out of the cuspidore, wash it off and return it to me. He does not seem to want it himself, but I do. With us in Pittsburg a dime is worth ten cents."

Under the eye of the Pittsburger and the rest of the inmates of the dining room the waiter fished the dime out of the cuspidore, washed it off in a finger bowl, wipped it dry with a napkin, and returned it to the owner.

"Now," said the Pittsburger to the head waiter, "shall I kick him out, or will he walk?"

"Oh ,he'll walk all right," said the chief, and out the waiter marched, to give an account of himself to the manager who had been summoned by the fracas.

"I always give my husband a box of cigars on his birthday, and they don't cost me anything either," said a woman from a nearby town recently. "My husband always buys his cigars by the box and he keeps the box in a drawer of the sitting room desk. I take one of his old boxes, and then abstract a cigar from his box and store them up. By taking them out one at a time he never misses them. I take care to have the box filled by the time his birthday comes around. I nail the box tight and carefully past the broken label together, and he never knows the difference.

'He's always tickeled to death to gt the cigars, as it saves him buying a box—so he thinks—and he compliments me on knowing and remembering his favorite brand of cigars. Even if I do pull one over on him I think it's a whole lot better than giving him a slipper case or a picture he doesn't care for or want, which most wives give their husbands for birthday presents."

THE NEW CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL MONT ALTO

CHILDRENS HOSPITAL

Forty little citizens journeying from various sections of the Commonwealth arrived in Harrisburg Saturday morning. They were enroute to the State Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Mont Alto. These children have all been patients in the State Dispensaries. When the new Children's Building at the Mont Alto Sanatorium opened a few days ago, places were made for one hundred of these little folks. The girls were sent for first and are already comfortably installed in their wards.

The officers of the Department of Health who was in charge of the boys decided that there was sufficient interval between trains to allow the small travelers a visit to the State Capitol, so they were taken on a personally conducted tour of the big building. All who could write marched up to the visitor's register and with much biting of tongues, managed to inscribe their names and places of residence thereon.

After a wonderful hour of sight seeing, they called on Dr. Dixon, Commissioner of Health. He went to the station with his little charges to see them safe on their way to the big institution on South Mountain where they are to grow fat and hearty and be given a fighting chance in this world through the generosity of the State.

Ten Feet Deep

By Clarissa Mackie

THE day I went crabbing with Captain Barnabas Fish I carried a basket containing all the dainties that I knew the good captain loved. He had become an enthusiast about club sandwiches, which he had not tasted before this summer when I first made his acquaintance, and so I was careful that there was a goodly supply of these toothsome "entire meal" sandwiches in the lunch basket. There was also a great square of frosted gingerbread, and wrapped in a napkin were several flaky plum tarts. In one corner of the basket was a tall bottle of dandelion wine. All these delicacies were produced by the skillful hands of Miss Maria Weeks, with whom I boarded.

Crabbing is a favorite pastime among the summer visitors at Quince Haven. One enters a sturdy flat bottomed skiff and, leaving the deeper waters of the bay, seeks the narrow channel leading into Little Quince harbor. This channel is navigable only at high tide, and if one is so unfortunate as to remain within the charming circle of Little Quince hills until the tide has ebbed it is only a three mile tramp around the beach to Quince Haven, with another trip back to the crabbing grounds for the skiff when the tide next serves.

Captain Barnabas Fish knew the tide as well as he did the wind and weather and the set of clouds, so we reached the little channel just as the tide flowed deep enough to carry us swiftly through its narrow width into Little Quince harbor. Once in here, Captain Barnabas allowed the skiff to drift quietly along the low shore among the tall, reedy salt grasses.

The crab nets were brought forth, and each of us took a long pole and warily dredged for the succulent crustaceans. Now and then one of us would bring up a pole with the net bag heavily weighted with the black wriggling creatures, or perhaps one lone captive would cling by a single claw to the netting.

As noon approached the pile in Captain Barnabas' big basket grew higher, and at last we gave up the sport and poled the skiff into the cool shadow of wild plum bushes overhanging from the high bank.

From under the bank little rills of ice cold water gushed from hidden springs, and here we washed our hands and returned to the skiff for lunch. Captain Barnabas wanted to broil

"A gigantic figure that gave vent to a snarling yell."

some crabs on a hastily constructed driftwood fire, but I vetoed the suggestion, tempting as it was.

I presented one of his loved club sandwiches, and his gray eyes twinkled appreciatively.

"It's better 'n broiled crabs," he murmured from the midst of a huge bite of crisp toast, lettuce leaf, mayonnaise, chicken breast and tender bacon.

"You never tasted anything quite so delicious even on that treasure island of yours," I declared meaningly.

"Ho, ho!" roared the captain, slapping his knee vigorously. "I knew there was something back of that sandwich, Miss Telham! Now, I was going to tell you that story today anyway, so you might have kept all your bribes to home."

"Then you shall tell it all the better for the sandwiches," I returned, undaunted by his laughter. "I hope it's a story where you were cast ashore without even a bag of biscuits—they sound so dry and unpalatable. I'm sure bread fruit and cocoanuts are much more delicious."

"They're delicious, all right," agreed the captain amiably, helping himself to another sandwich, "but you get tired of eating fruit even on a desert island, and hardtack ain't to be despised even if it is washed down by stale water, not when you're hungry. Now, Ananias Slime ain't in this story, so I shall have to stick to the truth and tell you we were not cast ashore, but we rowed to the island right and proper in a ship's dinghy, with a keg of water and a bag of biscuits and some tins of salt horse stowed in the bow. We also took some picks and shovels and some guns.

"We knew the little island like a book. It was not far from the west coast of Central America and had been dug over from one end to the other by different treasure seekers, all after the same hidden gold and jewles. I can't stop to tell you the history surrounding the burying of the treasure by the oiliest old pirate that ever sailed the seas in the days before Captain Kidd. I can't tell you, either, of all the different expeditions that combed that island from end to end without success, and at last we folks aboard the Indus resolved to have a try at it one voyage when we was sailing light from San Francisco to Valparaiso, where we were going to pick up a cargo of nitrate.

"Four of us went ashore in the dinghy, and the minute we stepped on that shell strewn beach and heard the rustling of the palms and smelled the ripe fruit we knew right away that we were going to find that treasure. There was something in the very atmosphere of the place that hinted at adventure, and we had plenty of it before we left. Thank you, ma'am. I will take another piece of gingerbread. I don't reckon you made it?" he inquired.

I assured him that Miss Maria Weeks had concocted the spicy loaf, and I thought he looked tenderly reminiscent at the frosting before he removed a semicircle from his slice. I had a suspicion that in the distant past there might have lurked a tender romance between my companionable old salt and the rather grim spinster who "accommodated" me with room and board. I had my own plans for furthering this romance, and the delicious lunch I had brought was only one of little traps I had prepared for the gentle, unsuspecting captain.

"You went ashore"— I prompted him.

"Yes, ma'am, we went ashore and made a little camp among the palms, and after we had had some supper we started off at a run for the place where we had calculated the treasure was buried. Of course every man who ever went to that island had a different theory as to where it was hid, but we thought ours was a sure guess, for Louis Franck, a Finn who was one of our crew, had an ancestor who had actually sailed with this bloody old pirate away back before the Revolutionary war days. Franck could recite the legend that had been handed down by his ancestor so glibly that he could tell it the same every time, and so after awhile we got to believe it was really so, and that was how it happened we decided to stop there.

"Of course Franck was the leader and guide, for he said his ancestor had said that the chest was buried ten feet deep under a rock ten feet square.

"We found the largest rock on the island, and it was only three feet six by six feet two, and it looked thin, and Franck said he thought it had been worn off by the wind and weather during all that time. It was snow white coral rock too.

"The rock was set in a little grove of palm trees, and I suppose once it had rested on the sandy shore, but as the island grew larger and sand was washed up to form a new beach trees grew up around the stone until it really was about in the middle of the island when we found it.

"We worked away picking and prying at the loose sand around the rock and trying to get crowbars under it so as to lift it up when we smelled wood smoke."

"'What's that?' asked Franck.

"'The remains of our campfire,' I told him, but afterward I found out I was wrong.

"It soon grew dark, for we had been late in landing and we had not intended beginning operations until morning, but the thirst for adventure was strong within us and even while the shadows lengthened a full moon arose from the sea and we decided to continue the work by its light.

"We had just pried off the stone and sent it crashing into the undergrowth when there arose from our midst, apparently from the disturbed soil under the stone, a gigantic figure that gave vent to a snarling yell as he leaped into the moonlit space and faced us.

"Miss Telham," said the captain impressively, emphasizing his words with successive taps of a horny forefinger against his other palm, "Miss Telham, believe me, ma'am, when I tell you that that there figure was nothing more or less than the ghost of the bloody pirate who had buried the treasure!"

"Captain Barnabas!" I protested.

He nodded. "That's what Louis Franck, the Finn, said. He said the critter looked just like the description his ancestor had handed down of the pirate who had buried the treasure. He whispered it to us, for I'll confess, ma'am, we huddled together all at once under the shock of seeing him and hearing his yell. I don't know which was the worst. He was a crazy looking thing, sure enough, as he pranced around there, waving a ragged looking knife and shouting all sorts of gibberish that nobody understood.

"I told Franck it sounded to me like Finnish, but he said it was Italian, and Tony Laconti said it was German, and the mate, who was a Britisher, said it was pure French. From what I heard afterward I guess it was Irish. Well, as I was saying, the pirate was crazy enough in looks—he wore knee breeches and a loose white shirt and a red sash around his waist with all kinds of weapons stuck in it, and his hair was long and dark, and over his forehead was bound a red handkerchief knotted behind. We could see all this because the tropical moon made it like day there on the white beach.

"'How do you know it's a ghost?'—I whispered to Louis Franck, who shivered beside me.

"He said the critter came from under the stone, and I couldn't deny it because it looked that way to me, and now as he capered around out there a sudden terror seized upon the whole four of us at once, and as we turned and ran he dashed into the thicket after us and away we went pell mell for the shore where we had left the boat.

"As we ran I could feel my hair bristling on my head, and cold shivers ran down my spine. All I wanted was to reach the boat and push off for the ship. We were all young chaps and had our share of sailors' superstitions. If an older head had been along things might have turned out different.

"We piled into the boat and pushed off, leaving all our stores behind. As we pulled toward the Indus—I was second mate on her then—we turned around and saw the ghostly pirate dancing at the water's edge. The knife flashed in the moonlight, and then all at once he disappeared, and there remained nothing save a ball of weird blue light that floated through the air in our wake.

"Where would you be, captain, if you had all that money?"

"Captain Sackville declared it was a corpse light, and as our boat was hoisted to the davits he had all sails bent, anchors up, and away we went clipping along before a fresh nor'wester and at last, to our relief, leaving the blue light behind with the island far astern."

The captain replaced the luncheon basket in the stern of the skiff, shifted the oars into the rowlocks and deftly shot out into Little Quince harbor. The blades of the oars riffled the placid surface in which the tall grasses were mirrored, and from a tall pine tree a red winged blackbird called.

"Well?" I asked impatiently. "Didn't you go back after the treasure?"

The captain shook his head solemnly, although I am positive his eyes twinkled amusement. He leaned forward, and the skiff shot into the channel that led into Quince Haven harbor.

"Miss Telham, when we arrived in New York months afterward we read in the papers that at last Little Island had given up her treasure to a bold Irishman from Hackensack, N. J. It told how this man, Sweeney, had pried up a flat stone and, together with his companions, had dug ten feet deep, mind you, Miss Telham, and found a chest of gold and jewels. If this Sweeney had not found us there and scared us away with his pretence of being a ghost of the pirate and afterward burning a blue signal light—why, I wouldn't be rowing you home across the bay this afternoon!"

"Where would you be, captain," I asked curiously, "if you had all that money?"

Captain Barnabas cocked an eye at the fleecy clouds, twisted his sunburned neck uncomfortably and finally spat reflectively over the side. At last he looked at me and grinned sheepishly.

"I reckon I'd be enjoying myself going crabbing with somebody or other," he said

Glad They Told Him.

What it is to be a genuine, single minded egotist is illustrated by an occurrence related by an American who spends much of his time in England. Among his acquaintances is a certain distinguished Britisher who is a great invalid and spends most of his time in bed, a fact which, however, does not prevent him from receiving a great deal of company. One day while thus in bed the Britisher received several guests. They all began to shiver and pull their coats about them as they huddled around the bed.

"What!" exclaimed the invalid "it cold here?"

"We are freezing," answered a guest.

"Thank you for telling me," said the distinguished invalid, who thereupon rang a bell. The guests supposed that he was summoning a servant to build a fire, but when his man came in the invalid said:

"Mullins, bring me my down coverlet."—Harper's Magazine.

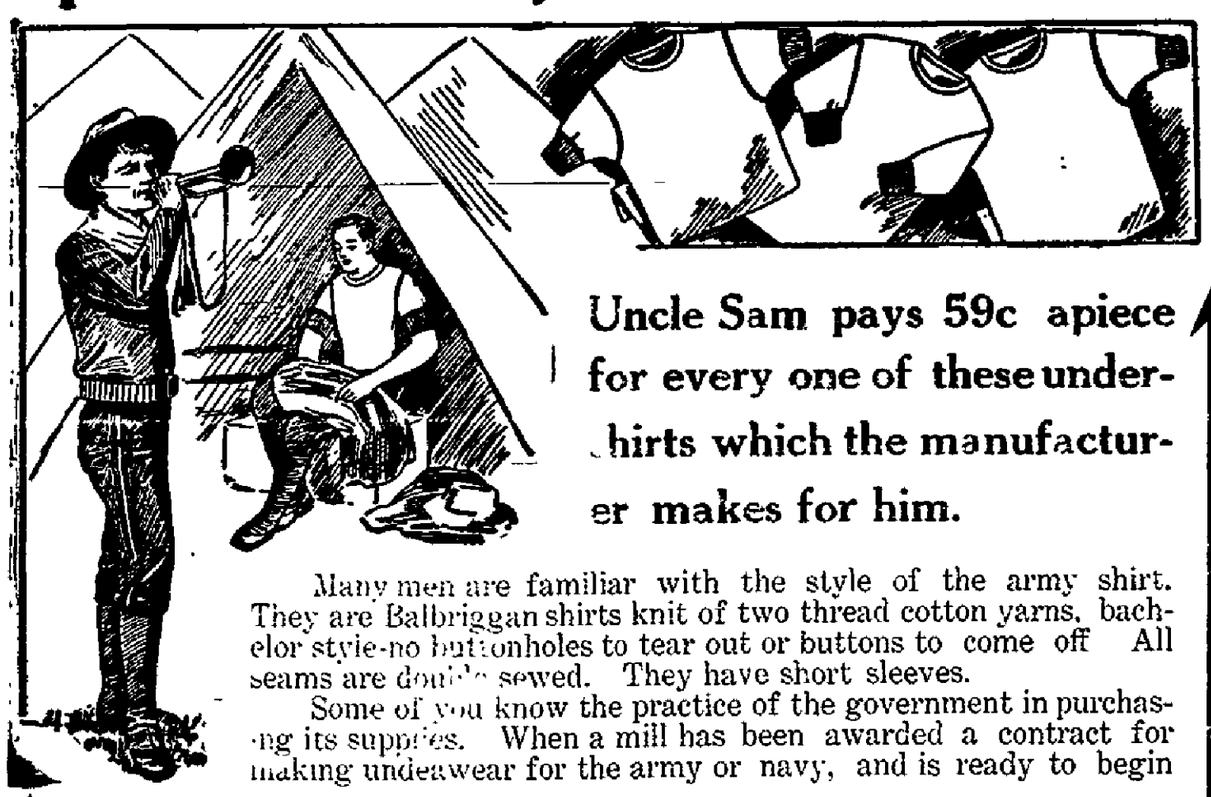
Special Sale Army Undershirts, 35c Each



Uncle Sam pays 59c apiece for every one of these undershirts which the manufacturer makes for him.

Many men are familiar with the style of the army shirt. They are Balbriggan shirts knit of two thread cotton yarns, bachelor style-no buttonholes to tear out or buttons to come off All seams are double sewed. They have short sleeves.

Some of you know the practice of the government in purchasing its supplies. When a mill has been awarded a contract for making underwear for the army or navy, and is ready to begin work under that contract, inspectors are sent right to the mill to oversee the work. Every garment passes through their hands. The slightest flaw or fault or any deviation from specifications, throws the garment out of the accepted class or into the "rejects."

These undershirts which we offer are rejected garments. Probably in many of these you will not discover the fault which brings them to you instead of to the soldier. In others you will notice a dropped stitch that has been caught up or some other slight imperfection. We believe that we are safe in making the statement that the serviceable qualities are not impaired in any of them.

They are certainly worth a good deal more than you are asked to give. See them in our window.

ADOLPH, of COURSE

COL. DERICKSON, LINCOLN GUARD, CALLED BY DEATH

Charles M. Derickson, a member of the body guard of President Lincoln at the time of the latter's assassination, and one of the first and oldest residents of Monessen, died at his home there Tuesday afternoon from heart disease. He was born in Mercer, the son of Major D. V. Derickson. At the age of 17 he enlisted in the Civil War in his father's company.

When his father became captain of the President's body guard Mr. Derickson became a member of the guard. On the night President Lincoln was shot as he sat in Ford's Theatre in Washington Mr. Derickson was on duty a block away. He carried the first news of the shooting to the White House.

Shortly after the town of Monessen was founded Mr. Derickson came there in 1898, and entered the hardware business. Later he became postmaster for several terms and during his residence there was prominent in public affairs. He was an official in the Presbyterian Church, a Shriner, a Knight Templar and an Elk. He leaves a widow. Interment will be made at Mercer on Friday.

CIRCUS CARRIES GIRAFFE FAMILY

The Ringlings have a remarkably interesting family of giraffes. This curious animal is becoming more of a rarity each year and it will not be long before they become extinct.

The giraffe has no vocal organs and can utter no sound. It can go longer than a camel without food and water, getting its moisture from the damp mosses on the trunks of jungle trees. Giraffes are found in the forest belt that hugs the equator in Africa. Hunters have driven them so far into the impenetrable jungle that only occasionally is one found. There is great danger of killing them in trying to capture them, and of those that are shipped the majority die on the sea voyage. So it may be seen why this strange animal is mising from most of the city zoos.

Another attractive exhibit in the animal department is an elephant which on April 3 celebrated its 215th birthday. Washington was still president of the United States when t his animal started in the show business in London. It was then 100 years old. There are thirty-nine more elephants to look at . Among them are the big Indian specimens, the umbrella-eared African beasts and various other varieties.

This is the circus of a thousand wonders. It is filed with novelties which begin to present themselves, when the forenoon parade passes through the streets. Here are found camels, zebras, llamas, elephants, and deer, driven in teams like horses.

Never before has Ringling Brothers' circus offered such an attractive program. Its talent is all European and of the 375 performers scarcely a score have been seen in this country. The big circus will give two performances in Charleroi on Saturday May 18 and each performance will be preceded by the great $500,000 worldess spectacle, "Joan of Arc" with 1,200 characters, a ballet of 300 dancing girls, a grand opera chorus, 600 horses and a trainload of special scenery stage properties and costumes. Circus spectcles have been seen in the past, but this is something entirely different and vastly superior to anything given in America in the past. The stage upon which it takes place is bigger than a hundred ordinary theatres.

This is the first instance in history of any tented show beginning a season without a considerable portion of its old equipment in various stages of decay and illy disguised with fresh paint. But this circus has not retained even so much as a single costume or a wagon wheel that was ever used before.

Moose, Leslie Campbell, a clothing merchant stated he figured the carnival would be to the interest of the town instead of a detriment. Dr. J. W. Manon presented a petition and in addition made a talk opposing the carnival as a detriment to the town, backing his argument by reference to previous carnivals in Charleroi and elsewhere.

The contract signed last week by the Moose Order and the Empire Carnival company when read revealed the fact that the company was bound not to furnish any immoral shows, and bound not to permit any gambling devices. It was stated the reason for the carnival scheme was that the Moose could secure funds for a new building.

Letters and petitions of protest against the carnival from the following business concerns and churches were read: Macbeth-Evans Glass company, Imperial Glass company, Pittsburg Plate Glass factory, Hussey-Binns Shovel company, Charleroi Coal company, Walton Lumber company, Charleroi Lumber company, Charleroi Iron works, Methodist Episcopal church official board, Christian church official board and men of the Baptist church. The opposition petition presented by Dr. Manon signed by about 25 representative citizens mostly business and professional men, was read. The sense of the letters and petitions was that a carnival would be a detriment to the town both in a financial and a moral way.

President W. R. Gaut of council explained that while considering the weight and influence of the protests, council stood already committed to the carnival proposition. Others of the citizens spoke stating that if action had been taken it was without hearing both sides, and therefore might well be re-considered. One of the factory representatives present stated that inasmuch as the factories were permanent busines institutions and a week's carnival a temporary institution and an admitted detriment, they had the right and took the right, to demand a reconsideraion. Two councilmen spoke against the carnival and three for, one having nothing to say on the matter. One councilman was absent.

Then upon motion council decided to meet on Friday to consider the matter in an official light. It is stated the carnival company would not ask the use of the streets, so that council really has little say on the matter. Burgess George W. Risbeck grants licenses to shows and it will probably be up to him finally to decide whether or not the carnival shall be allowed within the borough limits.

OPPOSITION DEVELOPES TO PLANS FOR CARNIVAL

CLAIMED TO BE DETRIMENT TO TOWN

A formidable wall of opposition to the proposal of Charleroi Lodge, No. 133, Loyal Order of Moose to hold a carnival in Charleroi the week of July 4 was shown at an adjourned meeting of council Tuesday night. Industrial concerns, a number of professional and businessmen and church men constituted the opposition. Council decided to defer action, either sanctioning the carnival or opposing it until Friday night, when the matter will again be taken up. With their authority as the individual verbal sanction of some members of council, the Moose order had already signed a contract with the Empire Carnival company. This contract which it was stated was different from the contracts of most carnivals was presented by a comittee from the Moose order, and was read.

Petitions were presented in opposition to the carnival scheme and several citizens and factory heads spoke in opposition. The chief speaker for the opposition was H. J. Booth superintendent of the Imperial Bottle factory. Mr. Booth said that with the manufacturing concerns it was a matter of dollars and cents. He said that they didn't oppose the carnival because it was a Moose carnival, but because it was a carnival. Mr Booth stated that such would mean a heavy loss for the factories. He said that past experience had showed that production was curtailed about 30 per cent, or if factories were operating to their fullest capacity from 100 per cent to 60 per cent. This he said was due to employes absenting themselves from work. The factory, a permanent institution, it was stated, would not only be a loser through a weekly visitation of a company which would put practically no money into the town, but the town would be a loser because the wage per employe during the week would be cut in the same proportion that industrial operation was curtailed.

Speaking as a members of the committee for the Loyal Order of

GIVE REASONS FOR THEIR OPPOSITION

Number of Business Men Protest Against Carnival and Tell Why-- Characterize it is a "Nuisance"

"Nuisance," "a demoralizing agent," "something that will not do the town a particle of good," "rottenest thing that ever happened," and other like phrases were used by business men this morning in characterizing carnivals,thelike of which Charleroi Lodge No. 133 Loyal Order of Moose wants to hold in Charleroi the week of July 4. That there is overwhelming sentiment against the proposed carnival was a fact evidenced by a quiet visit among most of the business men. Out of the number visited but two really spoke in favor of it. One of these somewhat facetiously observed that a carnival tended to relieve the monotony and gave a fellow a feeling as though he had had a vacation. He said that as a business proposition,carnivals usually had been a good thing for him. The other man of the two speaking in favor of the carnival said that while he did not figure it would be a good business proposition the week it was held, he was convinced it would be the means of bringing strangers here,who would come back.

The first business man asked as to his opinion of the carnival said: "It's the rottenest that ever happened. It would be a decided detriment to have a carnival come here. I'm one of the opposition."

Another man said: "If they mean to hold this carnival on lots bordering on the streets, then I am opposed. But I cannot see that there would be much objection to holding the carnival somewhere where it would not be so noticeable."

"Carnivals are demoralizing agents," said one. "They demoralize our factories, dirty our streets, bring no money into town and take money out. They are an absolute detriment to business. I have had exeprience with them, and know what I am talking about."

A groceryman said he was opposed to carnivals because they generally were no good, and because they damaged trade besides tending to demoralize the community. "A carnival is a nuisance," he emphatically declared.

Furniture men, dry goods men and all classes of dealers were approached with the usual result, chiefly that they found carnivals a detriment to business conditions and to the town generally. The general conclusion naturally follows that if a carnival company does come here for exhibition purposes in July, it will exhibit under difficulties. The trend of sentiment is against carnivals, but not against the Moose order, a fact prominently mentioned by several of those interviewed.

TO INSTITUTE CURB MARKET THIS MONTH

First Produce Will Probably be Sold May 25-- Later Date to de Selected for the Formal Opening

PRODUCERS ARE GREATLY INTERESTED

That within two weeks Charleroi will virtually have a curb market in operation was decided at a meeting [illegible] of the Charleroi Business Men's Association with farmers and gardeners at the Busness Men's Association rooms. On Saturday May 25, another meeting will be held that will be a sort of "open house" affair, between the farmers and local pueopie. On that date also there will be some garden stuff and farm products sold from the curb along Sixth street below Washington. However there will be no formal opening until a later date to be arranged at the "open house" meeting.

Farmers and producers generally are interested in the curb market scheme. Through their talk with the farmers and gardeners present at the meeting Tuesday night locally interested persons were much encouraged and have strong faith that the movement will be a success.

One man present at the meeting said that he was [illegible] of the belief that the curb market would be a good thing, that if necessary I would purchase a stall along Six street from which he might dispo. of produce. He was informed that tl curb market would be absolutely fre to producers.

A question was asked as to whether the curb market would interfere with street peddling of produce. The questioner was informed that the State law gave the right to all producers to sell from their wagons and that they could peddle if they so willed and nobody would have any right or authority to stop them.

Truck farmers and gardeners in the vicinity of Bentleyville back as far as Centerville and through the immediate surrounding country have professed their intention to take advantage of the proposed curb market.

CROSSING PROVIDED

Temporary Bridge Constructed Between Here and Speers

COUNCIL HEARS REPORT

Council had little time left for taking up unfinished borough business Tuesday night after hearing the dispute on the matter of the proposed Moose carnival. Councilman Calvert reported that provisions have been made so people can travel between this borough and Speers. Bridge contractors are now at work on a new bridge over Maple Creek along McKean avenue, which it will take until September to finish. A temporary bridge has been provided over a Lincoln avenue route.

A petition was presented asking that council use its influence in having the Pittsburg Railways company make stops with their cars at Fourth street, the same as at Fifth and other streets. The matter was taken under advisement.

President W. R. Gaut was in the chair and councilmen present were: W. H. Calvert, Dr. A. O. Davis, Oscar C. Linn, Frank Riva, and John K. Rickey.

SUPERIOR COURT TO HEAR CASE

Appeal to be Taken to Higher Tribunal by County Poor Directors

Steps were taken Tuesday by the attorneys for the board of Washington county poor directors to appeal to the superior court the case against Controller John H. Moffitt in which a writ of mandamus was sought by the poor directors to compel the controller to honor certain requisitions for funds, the position taken by Controller Moffit being upheld by the Washington county court and the application for the writ being denied.

The case has attracted much attention and the decision of the superior court will be awaited with interest.

SHOWER GIVEN IN HONOR OF BRIDE-TO-BE

At her home on Washington avenue Tuesday evening, a miscellaneous shower was given Miss Linnie Pearl McClure, whose engagement to Carroll E. Cummins has been announced, the wedding to be an event of the near future. The affair, which was a surprise, was planned and very successfullly carried out by Misses Bess Stroud, Bertha Oller and Roberta Trew. Only members of the Bachelor Girl's Club to which Miss McClore belongs, and a few of her intimate friends were included in the guest list. Music and conversation were enjoyed, and a dainty lunch was served. Many beautiful gifts were showered upon the bride-to-be.

Miss McClure is a member of one of Charleroi's oldest families. She is popular in the younger social set.

Mr. Chmmins is employed in the First National Bank, coming here from Parkersburg, W. V., about two years ago. He is a graduate of the West Virginia University at Morgantown.

CHARLEROI CASE IS DISPOSED OF

With only Judge J. A. McIlvaine on the bench criminal court at Washington has moved rather slowly. However, Judge Porter of Lawrence county was expected to be present to take Judge J. F. Taylor's place on the bench today, after which more speed will be attained. In the case of the commonwealth against David F. Mathers,constable of North Charleroi and his assistant, Charles Chester of Charleroi, Mathers was found guilty of assault and he was fined $15 and costs. Chester was found not guilty, but was assessed the costs. The case was brought by Joseph Erebrich, a fish dealer in Charleroi, against whom Mathers served a levy. Erebrich was also tried for resisting an officer, but was found not guilty. He was also assessed with a portion of the costs.

Andy Powder, a miner living in West Pike Run township in the Daisytown section, entered a plea of guilty to a charge of felonious assault and battery and carrying concealed weapons. He was given an indeterminate sentence in the penitentiary,the maximum being seven years and the minimum the fourth of that amount.

John Showan of Donora charged by Stanilas Lukoski with acrime against morality admitted his guilt. He was fined $10 and costs.

The jury was out in one case and another case was on trial when court adjourned Tuesday evening.

Jury Recommends Playgrounds for Children's Home

INSPECTS INSTITUTIONS

The May term grand jury was discharged Tuesday with the thanks of the court. The jury visited the two homes at Arden and returned to Washington in the afternoon.

In their report to the court the jurymen commended the management of the jail and the county and children's homes. They stated they found things in good sanitary condition and recommended that the woodwork in both the county and children's homes be painted, and that outside fire escapes be provided for the children's home, although the latter has an inside stairway that is regarded as fireproof. They also recommended that the proper authorities provide additional means of enjoyment for the children at the home in the form of outdoor swings, sand-piles and such other appliances at a reasonable cost as are approved in out-door play grounds.

AMATEUR BASEBALL.

With a number of church baseball leagues in this section, Charleroi ought to be able to produce some amateur games this season worth while. In addition to our own league, which in the past has put up some of the best amateur games ever witnessed, and which is in a position to duplicate the record this season, there are church leagues at Monessen and Monongahela, and one has been just organized at Washington. No doubt in the course of a few weeks, after the leagues have developed their best players some interesting games could be arranged between the star clubs of the different leagues. This would add zest to the contests, and bring out the best and most energetic competition among the amateur players.

The church league plan offers the best form of training for baseball that has yet been devised, from the fact that a large number of players in each comunity have an opportunity to play organized ball according to league rules of the game. At the same time the players are under good physical and moral discipline, which develops in them the best attributes of manhood. Thus far the church baseball league is purely voluntary but it is being recognized that it can operate as a moral force in every community of any considerable size, and by giving it the proper support it can become a permanent feature in bringing young men and boys under [illegible] would not get otherwise.

Church league baseball is a social and civic movement and conducted along the right lines it can be made productive of inestimable benefit.

FARMERS GET BUSY.

Arrangements have been completed for conferences to be held at the Capitol at Harrisburg on May 23 and 24 to carry out the plans of the Pennsylvania State Grange for a co-operative association and for the advancement of agricultural education in the schools. The meetings will be for general discussion and representatives of the grange the State and railroads and schools have been invited to attend.

The conference on co-operation will be held in the House caucus room on May 23, at which the plans of the grange for the co-operative buying and selling will be outlined and representatives of the railroads have been invited to attend so that there can be a general expression of opinions on transportation of farm products.

The following day the Grangers will meet with Dr. N. C. Schaffer, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, his staff and prominent educators to discuss "The school code as it affects rural schools especially the teaching of agriculture in public schools."

The farmer, after all, is the chief mover in changing economic conditions. It was the farmers who went into the Populistic movement in the west when things were breaking badly with them, and it is the western states which are the most progressive in their legislation. When the farmers start a movement, something is sure to happen.

PICKED UP IN PASSING

A Chareroi man relates how a friend of his resented the tyrany of a hotel waiter at a prominent Philadelphia nosteiry recently. The friend who was a leading Pittsburg business man, has occasion to visit the Quaker City, and put up at the hotel in question. At breakfast next morning not feeling particularly hungry, he ordered a plate of rolls and a cup of coffee. At the conclusion of the repast he placed a dime on the table as a tip for the waiter, who had given him no attention save to bring on the rolls and coffee. Very conspicuously the waiter picked up the dime between his thumb and forefinger, and with many extravagant flourishes and arm extended, carried it across the roo mand dropped it into a cuspidore.

Instantly the Pittsburger, who was a big and husky man, grabbed the waiter by the back of the neck and dragging him back to the table bumped the flunkey's head good and hard. The head waiter and several others came running up, and asked what the trouble was and what the man wanted.

"I want this fellow to pick that dime out of the cuspidore, wash it off and return it to me. He does not seem to want it himself, but I do. With us in Pittsburg a dime is worth ten cents."

Under the eye of the Pittsburger and the rest of the inmates of the dining room the waiter fished the dime out of the cuspidore, washed it off in a finger bowl, wipped it dry with a napkin, and returned it to the owner.

"Now," said the Pittsburger to the head waiter, "shall I kick him out, or will he walk?"

"Oh ,he'll walk all right," said the chief, and out the waiter marched, to give an account of himself to the manager who had been summoned by the fracas.

"I always give my husband a box of cigars on his birthday, and they don't cost me anything either," said a woman from a nearby town recently. "My husband always buys his cigars by the box and he keeps the box in a drawer of the sitting room desk. I take one of his old boxes, and then abstract a cigar from his box and store them up. By taking them out one at a time he never misses them. I take care to have the box filled by the time his birthday comes around. I nail the box tight and carefully past the broken label together, and he never knows the difference.

'He's always tickeled to death to gt the cigars, as it saves him buying a box—so he thinks—and he compliments me on knowing and remembering his favorite brand of cigars. Even if I do pull one over on him I think it's a whole lot better than giving him a slipper case or a picture he doesn't care for or want, which most wives give their husbands for birthday presents."

THE NEW CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL MONT ALTO

DR. DIXON, COMMISSIONER OF HEALTH AND GROUP OF BOYS ENROUTE TO MONT ALTO

CHILDRENS HOSPITAL

Forty little citizens journeying from various sections of the Commonwealth arrived in Harrisburg Saturday morning. They were enroute to the State Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Mont Alto. These children have all been patients in the State Dispensaries. When the new Children's Building at the Mont Alto Sanatorium opened a few days ago, places were made for one hundred of these little folks. The girls were sent for first and are already comfortably installed in their wards.

The officers of the Department of Health who was in charge of the boys decided that there was sufficient interval between trains to allow the small travelers a visit to the State Capitol, so they were taken on a personally conducted tour of the big building. All who could write marched up to the visitor's register and with much biting of tongues, managed to inscribe their names and places of residence thereon.

After a wonderful hour of sight seeing, they called on Dr. Dixon, Commissioner of Health. He went to the station with his little charges to see them safe on their way to the big institution on South Mountain where they are to grow fat and hearty and be given a fighting chance in this world through the generosity of the State.

Ten Feet Deep

By Clarissa Mackie

THE day I went crabbing with Captain Barnabas Fish I carried a basket containing all the dainties that I knew the good captain loved. He had become an enthusiast about club sandwiches, which he had not tasted before this summer when I first made his acquaintance, and so I was careful that there was a goodly supply of these toothsome "entire meal" sandwiches in the lunch basket. There was also a great square of frosted gingerbread, and wrapped in a napkin were several flaky plum tarts. In one corner of the basket was a tall bottle of dandelion wine. All these delicacies were produced by the skillful hands of Miss Maria Weeks, with whom I boarded.

Crabbing is a favorite pastime among the summer visitors at Quince Haven. One enters a sturdy flat bottomed skiff and, leaving the deeper waters of the bay, seeks the narrow channel leading into Little Quince harbor. This channel is navigable only at high tide, and if one is so unfortunate as to remain within the charming circle of Little Quince hills until the tide has ebbed it is only a three mile tramp around the beach to Quince Haven, with another trip back to the crabbing grounds for the skiff when the tide next serves.

Captain Barnabas Fish knew the tide as well as he did the wind and weather and the set of clouds, so we reached the little channel just as the tide flowed deep enough to carry us swiftly through its narrow width into Little Quince harbor. Once in here, Captain Barnabas allowed the skiff to drift quietly along the low shore among the tall, reedy salt grasses.

The crab nets were brought forth, and each of us took a long pole and warily dredged for the succulent crustaceans. Now and then one of us would bring up a pole with the net bag heavily weighted with the black wriggling creatures, or perhaps one lone captive would cling by a single claw to the netting.

As noon approached the pile in Captain Barnabas' big basket grew higher, and at last we gave up the sport and poled the skiff into the cool shadow of wild plum bushes overhanging from the high bank.

From under the bank little rills of ice cold water gushed from hidden springs, and here we washed our hands and returned to the skiff for lunch. Captain Barnabas wanted to broil

"A gigantic figure that gave vent to a snarling yell."

some crabs on a hastily constructed driftwood fire, but I vetoed the suggestion, tempting as it was.

I presented one of his loved club sandwiches, and his gray eyes twinkled appreciatively.

"It's better 'n broiled crabs," he murmured from the midst of a huge bite of crisp toast, lettuce leaf, mayonnaise, chicken breast and tender bacon.

"You never tasted anything quite so delicious even on that treasure island of yours," I declared meaningly.

"Ho, ho!" roared the captain, slapping his knee vigorously. "I knew there was something back of that sandwich, Miss Telham! Now, I was going to tell you that story today anyway, so you might have kept all your bribes to home."

"Then you shall tell it all the better for the sandwiches," I returned, undaunted by his laughter. "I hope it's a story where you were cast ashore without even a bag of biscuits—they sound so dry and unpalatable. I'm sure bread fruit and cocoanuts are much more delicious."

"They're delicious, all right," agreed the captain amiably, helping himself to another sandwich, "but you get tired of eating fruit even on a desert island, and hardtack ain't to be despised even if it is washed down by stale water, not when you're hungry. Now, Ananias Slime ain't in this story, so I shall have to stick to the truth and tell you we were not cast ashore, but we rowed to the island right and proper in a ship's dinghy, with a keg of water and a bag of biscuits and some tins of salt horse stowed in the bow. We also took some picks and shovels and some guns.

"We knew the little island like a book. It was not far from the west coast of Central America and had been dug over from one end to the other by different treasure seekers, all after the same hidden gold and jewles. I can't stop to tell you the history surrounding the burying of the treasure by the oiliest old pirate that ever sailed the seas in the days before Captain Kidd. I can't tell you, either, of all the different expeditions that combed that island from end to end without success, and at last we folks aboard the Indus resolved to have a try at it one voyage when we was sailing light from San Francisco to Valparaiso, where we were going to pick up a cargo of nitrate.

"Four of us went ashore in the dinghy, and the minute we stepped on that shell strewn beach and heard the rustling of the palms and smelled the ripe fruit we knew right away that we were going to find that treasure. There was something in the very atmosphere of the place that hinted at adventure, and we had plans [illegible] fore we left. Thank you, ma'am. I will take another piece of gingerbread. I don't reckon you made it?" he inquired.

I assured him that Miss Maria Weeks had concocted the spicy loaf, and I thought he looked tenderly reminiscent at the frosting before he removed a semicircle from his slice. I had a suspicion that in the distant past there might have lurked a tender romance between my companionable old salt and the rather grim spinster who "accommodated" me with room and board. I had my own plans for furthering this romance, and the delicious lunch I had brought was only one of little traps I had prepared for the gentle, unsuspecting captain.

"You went ashore"— I prompted him.

"Yes, ma'am, we went ashore and made a little camp among the palms, and after we had had some supper we started off at a run for the place where we had calculated the treasure was buried. Of course every man who ever went to that island had a different theory as to where it was hid, but we thought ours was a sure guess, for Louis Franck, a Finn who was one of our crew, had an ancestor who had actually sailed with this bloody old pirate away back before the Revolutionary war days. Franck could recite the legend that had been handed down by his ancestor so glibly that he could tell it the same every time, and so after awhile we got to believe it was really so, and that was how it happened we decided to stop there.

"Of course Franck was the leader and guide, for he said his ancestor had said that the chest was buried ten feet deep under a rock ten feet square.

"We found the largest rock on the island, and it was only three feet six by six feet two, and it looked thin, and Franck said he thought it had been worn off by the wind and weather during all that time. It was snow white coral rock too.

"The rock was set in a little grove of palm trees, and I suppose once it had rested on the sandy shore, but as the island grew larger and sand was washed up to form a new beach trees grew up around the stone until it really was about in the middle of the island when we found it.

"We worked away picking and prying at the loose sand around the rock and trying to get crowbars under it so as to lift it up when we smelled wood smoke."

"'What's that?' asked Franck.

"'The remains of our campfire,' I told him, but afterward I found out I was wrong.

"It soon grew dark, for we had been late in landing and we had not intended beginning operations until morning, but the thirst for adventure was strong within us and even while the shadows lengthened a full moon arose from the sea and we decided to continue the work by its light.

"We had just pried off the stone and sent it crashing into the undergrowth when there arose from our midst, apparently from the disturbed soil under the stone, a gigantic figure that gave vent to a snarling yell as he leaped into the mooulit space and faced us.

"'Miss Telham,' said the captain impressively, emphasizing his words with successive taps of a horny forefinger against his other palm, 'Miss Telham, believe me, ma'am, when I tell you that that there figure was nothing more or less than the ghost of the bloody pirate who had buried the treasure!'

"'Captain Barnabas!' I protested.

He nodded. "That's what Louis Franck, the Finn, said. He said the critter looked just like the description his ancestor had handed down of the pirate who had buried the treasure. He whispered it to us, for I'll confess, ma'am, we huddled together all at once under the shock of seeing him and hearing his yell. I don't know which was the worst. He was a crazy looking thing, sure enough, as he pranced around there, waving a ragged looking knife and shouting all sorts of gibberish that nobody understood.

"I told Franck it sounded to me like Finnish, but he said it was Italian, and Tony Lacenti said it was German, and the mate, who was a Britisher, said it was pure French. From what I heard afterward I guess it was Irish. Well, as I was saying, the pirate was crazy enough in looks—he wore knee breeches and a loose white shirt and a red sash around his waist with all kinds of weapons stuck in it, and his hair was long and dark, and over his forehead was bound a red handkerchief knotted behind. We could see all this because the tropical moon made it like day there on the white beach.

"'How do you know it's a ghost?' I whispered to Louis Franck, who shivered beside me.

"He said the critter came from under the stone, and I couldn't deny it because it looked that way to me, and now as he capered around out there a sudden terror seized upon the whole four of us at once, and as we turned and ran he dashed into the thicket after us and away we went pell mell for the shore where we had left the boat.

"As we ran I could feel my hair bristling on my head, and cold shivers ran down my spine. All I wanted was to reach the boat and push off for the ship. We were all young chaps and had our share of sailors' superstitions. If an older head had been along things might have turned out different.

"We piled into the boat and pushed off, leaving all our stores behind. As we pulled toward the Indus—I was second mate on her then—we turned around and saw the ghostly pirate dancing at the water's edge. The knife flashed in the moonlight, and then all at once he disappeared, and there remained nothing save a ball of weird blue light that floated through the air in our wake.

"Where would you be, captain, if you had all that money?"

"Captain Sackville declared it was a corpse light, and as our boat was hoisted to the davits he had all sails bent, anchors up, and away we went clipping along before a fresh nor'wester and at last, to our relief, leaving the blue light behind with the island far astern."

The captain replaced the luncheon basket in the stern of the skiff, shifted the oars into the rowlocks and deftly shot out into Little Quince harbor. The blades of the oars riffled the placid surface in which the tall grasses were mirrored, and from a tall pine tree a red winged blackbird called.

"Well?" I asked impatiently. "Didn't you go back after the treasure?"

The captain shook his head solemnly, although I am positive his eyes twinkled amusement. He leaned forward, and the skiff shot into the channel that led into Quince Haven harbor.

"Miss Telham, when we arrived in New York months afterward we read in the papers that at last Little island had given up her treasure to a bold Irishman from Hackensack, N. J. It told how this man, Sweeney, had pried up a flat stone and, together with his companions, had dug ten feet deep, mind you, Miss Telham, and found a chest of gold and jewels. If this Sweeney had not found us there and scared us away with his pretence of being a ghost of the pirate and afterward burning a blue signal light—why, I wouldn't be rowing you home across the bay this afternoon!"

"Where would you be, captain," I asked curiously, "if you had all that money?"

Captain Barnabas cocked an eye at the fleecy clouds, twisted his sunburned neck uncomfortably and finally spat reflectively over the side. At last he looked at me and grinned sheepishly.

"I reckon I'd be enjoying myself going crabbing with somebody or other," he said.

Glad They Told Him.

What it is to be a genuine, single minded egotist is illustrated by an occurrence related by an American who spends much of his time in England. Among his acquaintances is a certain distinguished Britisher who is a great invalid and spends most of his time in bed, a fact which, however, does not prevent him from receiving a great deal of company. One day while thus in bed the Britisher received several guests. They all began to shiver and pull their coats about them as they huddled around the bed.

"What!" exclaimed the invalid. "It cold here?"

"We are freezing," answered a guest.

"Thank you for telling me," said the distinguished invalid, who thereupon rang a bell. The guests supposed that he was summoning a servant to build a fire, but when his man came in the invalid said:

"Mullins, bring me my down coverlet."—Harper's Magazine.

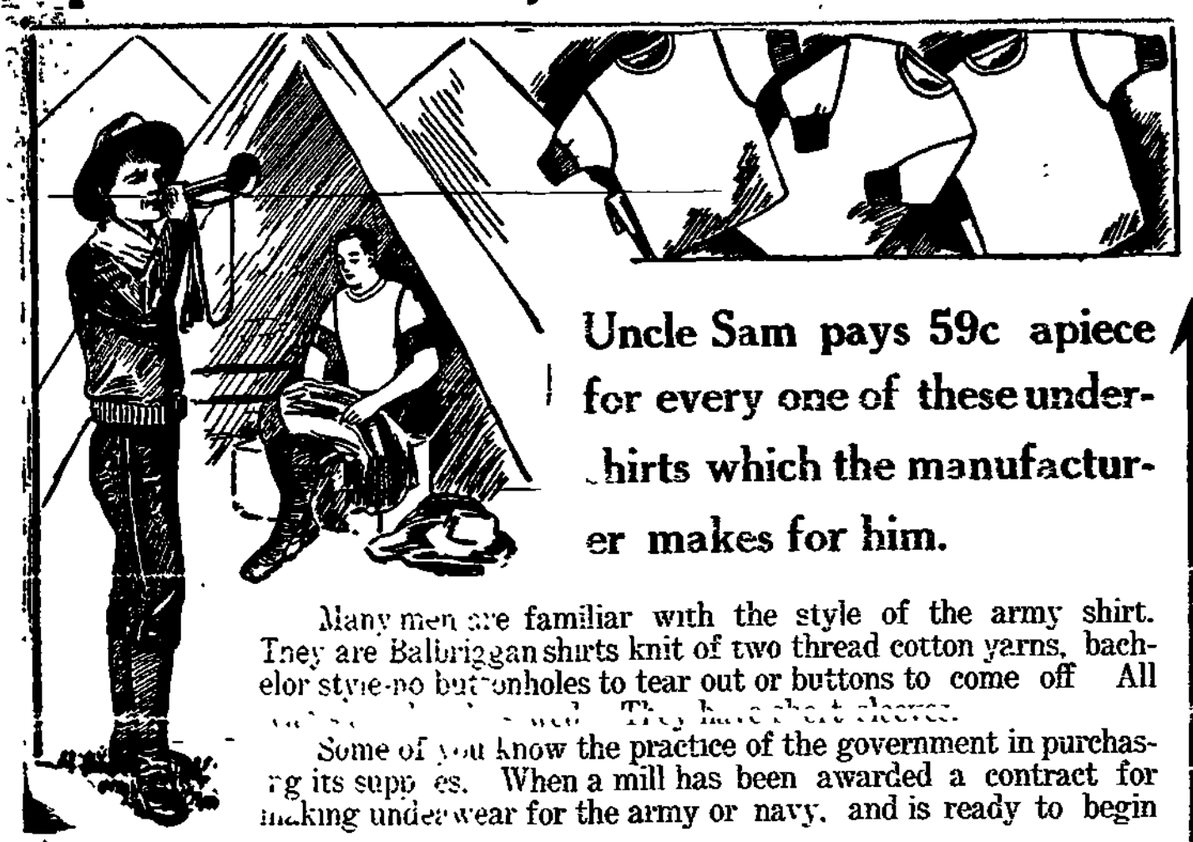
Special Sale Army Undershirts, 35c Each



Uncle Sam pays 59c apiece for every one of these undershirts which the manufacturer makes for him.

Many men are familiar with the style of the army shirt. They are Balbriggan shirts knit of two thread cotton yarns, bachelor style-no buttonholes to tear out or buttons to come off All [illegible] They have short sleeves.

Some of you know the practice of the government in purchasing its supplies. When a mill has been awarded a contract for making underwear for the army or navy, and is ready to begin work under that contract, inspectors are sent right to the mill to oversee the work. Every garment passes through their hands. The slightest flaw or fault or any deviation from specifications, throws the garment out of the accepted class or into the "rejects."

These undershirts which we offer are rejected garments. Probably in many of these you will not discover the fault which brings them to you instead of to the soldier. In others you will notice a dropped stitch that has been caught up or some other slight imperfection. We believe that we are safe in making the statement that the serviceable qualities are not impaired in any of them.

They are certainly worth a good deal more than you are asked to give. See them in our window.

35c each; three for $1.00

COL. DERICKSON, LINCOLN GUARD, CALLED BY DEATH

Charles M. Derickson, a member of the body guard of President Lincoln at the time of the latter's assassination, and one of the first and oldest residents of Monessen, died at his home there Tuesday afternoon from heart disease. He was born in Mercer, the son of Major D V. Derickson At the age of 17 he enlisted in the Civil War in his father's company.

When his father became captain of the President's body guard Mr Derickson became a member of the guard On the night President Lincoln was shot as he sat in Ford's Theatre in Washington Mr Derickson was on duty a block away He carried the first news of the shooting to the White House.

Shortly after the town of Monessen was founded Mr Derickson came there in 1898 and entered in the hardware business Later he became postmaster for several terms and during his residence there was prominent in public affairs He was an official in the Presbyterian Church. a Shriner, a Knight Templar and an Elk He leaves a widow. Interment will be made at Mercer on Friday

The Ringlings have a remarkably interesting family of giraffes This curious animal is becoming more of a rarity each year and it will not be long before they become extinct

The giraffe has no vocal organs and can utter no sound. It can go longer than a camel without food and water, getting its moisture from the damp mosses on the trunks of jungle trees. Giraffes are found in the forest belt that hugs the equator in Africa. Hunters have driven them so far into the impenetrable jungle that only occasionally is one found. There is great danger of killing them in trying to capture them, and of those that are shipped the majority die on the sea voyage. So it may be seen why this strange animal is mising from most of the city zoos.

Another attractive exhibit in the animal department is an elephant which on April 3 celebrated its 215th birthday. Washington was still president of the United States when this animal started in the show business in London. It was then 100 years old. There are thirty-nine more elephants to look at . Among them are the big Indian specimens, the umbrella-eared African beasts and various other varieties.

This is the circus of a thousand wonders It is filed with novelties which begin to present themselves. when the forenoon parade passes through the streets. Here are found camels, zebras llamas, elephants, and deer, driven in teams like horses

Never before has Ringling Brothers' circus offered such an attractive program. Its talent is all European and of the 375 performers scarcely a score have been seen in this country. The big circus will give two performances in Charleroi on Saturday May 18 and each performance will be preceded by the great $500,000 worldess spectacle, "Joan of Arc" with 1,200 characters, a ballet of 300 dancing girls,a grand opera chorus,600 horses and a trainload of special scenery stage properties and costumes. Circus spectcles have been seen in the past, but this is something entirely different and vastly superior to anything given in America in the past The stage upon which it takes place is bigger than a hundred ordinary theatres.

This is the first instance in history of any tented show beginning a season without a considerable portion of its old equipment in various stages of decay and illy disguised with fresh paint. But this circus has not retained even so much as a single costume or a wagon wheel that was ever used before.

Moose, Leslie Campbell, a clothing merchant stated he figured the carnival would be to the interest of the town instead of a detriment. Dr. J. W. Manon presented a petition and in addition made a talk opposing the carnival as a detriment to the town, backing his argument by reference to previous carnivals in Charleroi and elsewhere.

The contract signed last week by the Moose Order and the Empire Carnival company when read revealed the fact that the company was bound not to furnish any immoral shows, and bound not to permit any gambling devices. It was stated the reason for the carnival scheme was that the Moose could secure funds for a new building.

Letters and petitions of protest against the carnival from the following business concerns and churches were read Macbeth-Evans Glass company, Imperial Glass company, Pittsburg Plate Glass factory, Hussey-Binns Shovel company, Charleroi Coal company, Walton Lumber company, Charleroi Lumber company, Charleroi Iron works, Methodist Episcopal church official board,Christian church official board and men of the Baptist church The opposition petition presented by Dr. Manon signed by about 25 representative citizens mostly business and professional men, was read The sense of the letters and petitions was that a carnival would be a detriment to the town both in a financial and a moral way.

President W R. Gaut of council explained that while considering the weight and influence of the protests, council stood already committed to the carnival proposition. Others of the citizens spoke stating that if action had been taken it was without hearing both sides, and therefore might well be re-considered One of the factory representatives present stated that inasmuch as the factories were permanent busines institutions and a week's carnival a temporary institution and an admitted detriment, they had the right and took the right, to demand a reconsideration. Two councilmen spoke against the carnival and three for, one having nothing to say on the matter. One councilman was absent

Then upon motion council decided to meet on Friday to consider the matter in an official light. It is stated the carnival company would not ask the use of the streets, so that council really has little say on the matter. Burgess George W. Risbeck grants licenses to shows and it will probably be up to him finally to decide whether or not the carnival shall be allowed within the borough limits.

"YOU LOOK SO WELL"

Just say that to a woman and see her eyes sparkle with pleasure. She knows there is no beauty like the beauty of health.

Unfortunately at this time of year run-down condition that there are few to whim one can say it.

Mrs C Langan, 1954 Anthony ave., New York City, says in a letter: "My health began to run down two years ago and from that time till last April I was in a badly weakened condition with little energy and poor appetite. Having heard so much about Vinol I began taking it and already I have improved so much that all my friends notice a great difference. I have entirely recovered my former strength —thanks to Vinol."

This delicious cod liver and iron remedy without oil is of the greatest value in creating strength, restoring appetite and building up the body. Pale, sickly women, overworked men, feeble old folks and delicate children all need it,and we positively guarantee Vinol to give satisfaction. Piper Bros., Druggists, Charleroi, Pa.
